

We're here for healthcare.

Throughout the fight against COVID-19 and beyond, Owens & Minor is here to empower our healthcare customers and supply partners.

Together, we're making a difference.

Owens & Minor has been in the business of healthcare for over 135 years. We know that when times are hard, healthcare doesn't stop—and neither do we. As the world battles the 2019 novel coronavirus (COVID-19) pandemic, our teammates are working around the clock to serve our mission to empower our customers to advance healthcare. Throughout the many challenges and unprecedented demand stemming from COVID-19, Owens & Minor's goal remains the same: we're here for healthcare. We're here for the clinicians and the patients. We're here for each other.

The health and safety of our teammates, suppliers, and our customers and their patients are at the heart of everything that we do. Whether it's implementing advanced safety protocols to protect our teammates and service providers, or taking significant action across our organization to make and deliver product as rapidly as possible, Owens & Minor is committed to protecting our healthcare customers and the patients they care for in the fight against COVID-19.

In the earliest days of the COVID-19 impact on the United States, we enacted business continuity and expedited delivery plans to ensure our ongoing capability to supply critical products to the nation's hospitals. The majority of Owens & Minor's Personal Protective Equipment (PPE) manufacturing is located within the US and Americas, enabling a more rapid supply chain from point of manufacture into the United States. We've invested heavily to further expand manufacturing capacity to supply as much critical equipment as possible during this challenging time.

We are also working closely with government agencies such as FEMA and HHS along with our supply chain partners to address the unprecedented demand for PPE so we can provide healthcare customers critical product needed to fight this crisis. COVID-19 has certainly challenged our industry and the supply chain, but Owens & Minor, leveraging our Americas manufacturing footprint, remains intensely focused on partnering with suppliers and customers to mitigate risk wherever possible.

Our leadership team is in awe of the tireless efforts of the entire healthcare community, including our customers, teammates and suppliers, in the fight against COVID-19. We are extremely proud to be part of Owens & Minor as together we work to conquer this global challenge. These are uncertain times, but I am confident in our ability to empower healthcare today, tomorrow and for years beyond this crisis, just as we've done for the past century and more.
